Police said the incident unfolded at about 10:30 p.m.

with eight friends hanging out and drinking at "the rocks" in Little Bay Park near Fort Totten. The friends broke up into two groups at about 12:15 a.m., piling into two vehicles; a 1993 Honda Civic driven by Bolivar Camacho, 19, and a 1994 Chevrolet (Chevy) Trailblazer SUV driven by Milton Flores, 20.

According to police, the Honda and Chevy were headed northbound on the Cross Island Parkway jockeying with each other while racing at speeds above 70 mph.

As the two vehicles neared the ramp to the Whitestone Expressway, the Chevy allegedly hit the side of the Honda on a stretch of highway known as "dead man's curve," police sources said.

The impact caused Camacho to lose control of the Civic, which spun into a median and then skidded across two lanes crashing into a light pole. The Chevy rammed into the Civic and flipped over several times tossing three of its occupants onto the highway, police said.

Jonathan Reyes, 19, of East Elmhurst, was killed in the crash; Amy Koo, 16, of Jackson Heights, whose father is an New York Police Department (NYPD) sergeant, was critically injured; Koo's boyfriend, Marcus Akus, 19, is listed in critical condition at New York Hospital of Queens (NYHQ), and his pal Elder Valencia-Alzate, 23, of Elmhurst, was paralyzed from the neck down. Henry Hernandez, 19, who was riding in the SUV, is listed in fair condition at NYHQ while Flores and his passenger, Jonathan Garcia, 20, were taken to Jacobi Hospital with less serious injuries, according to the police.

Reyes' family was doubly devastated by his death, since he survived a mistaken identity shooting on April 19, police sources said.

Camacho and Flores are facing charges of manslaughter, criminally negligent homicide and vehicular assault. Flores was also charged with driving while intoxicated.

Law enforcement sources said Flores was arrested three times in Queens since last November, on weapons possession, disorderly conduct, marijuana and public drinking charges. Camacho and Flores face up to 15 years in prison, if convicted.
